FRANCE.

PARIS, July 13.—The declaration of war has been delivered to Count Von Lagerfeld.

PARIS, July 14.—The following is the text of the declaration made by the Duke De Gramont before the Senate to-day:

"GENTLEMEN: The manner in which the country received our declaration on the 6th of July is a spontaneous manifestation of the will of the nation. We have no wish to impose upon it any form of government. We do not treat with Spain, which we consider as our friend, but with the Prince of Hohenzollern, whom we consider to be under the influence of the King of Prussia. We have addressed ourselves to the King, who maintained that he was a stranger to the affair, and that he could not intervene without violating the rights of the family. He has since declared that he had instructed Benedetti. We could not accept the answer, and we demanded that the King should forbid a renewal of the candidature. Benedetti in the project came from the courtesy whence it was most expected. We then declared that we should consider the refusal as a casus belli. The telegram of Ems has confirmed our fears. To these demands, made in moderate terms, we declared if we withdrew any interrogation. The King declined to say that he would interfere in future with the candidature, but he refused to declare that he would forbid a renewal of the candidature. He declared that he reserved to himself the right to consider the old treaties as dead, and to act according to circumstances. He declared that he would not receive our ambassador. We could not accept the answer, and we demanded that the King should write to the Emperor to apologize for the insult to our ambassador
